K&H DESIGN

Whether planning a Hong Kong apartment according to the principles of feng shui or designing a bespoke bas relief panel for a powder room as part of the renovation of a neoclassical duplex in London's Belgravia, K&H Design co-founders Katie Glaister and Henry Miller-Robinson always begin the design process with a sketch. The pair, who set up their studio five years ago, cite 'thinking projects' as their favourite kind and are interested in designing homes for people to really live in, which make the most out of every inch of space. Unique touches might include designing their own curtains (some are dyed and hand-woven in Laos, others are hand-smocked in Suffolk), lining under-bed jumper boxes with vintage fabrics embroidered with the clients' initials, or favouring sustainable materials such as Pyrolave, a volcanic lava stone, for kitchen worktops. 'No nook goes unnoticed; it's the details that make each project so interesting and rewarding,' confirms Katie.
